Politics and Religion

Much has been said this election year about politics and whether one’s Christianity or lack of it should ever be a consideration in how one should vote. Strangely enough, for the first time in the memory of many of us both presidential candidates espouse vital Christianity. President Ford has been an attender at Congressional prayer meetings, goes to church, and gets spiritual advice from Billy Zeoli, a Baptist evangelist. Governor Carter is a member of a Baptist church, teaches Sunday School, and has as his greatest advantage, to this writer’s thinking, his relationship to Ruth Stapleton, who is well known in CFO and Charismatic circles. How does one vote under such circumstances? If one could believe political platforms he would doubt less see the unworkability and financial impossibility of the Democratic Platform and would thus vote Republican. Concerning the State Department, there appears to be Harvard/Rockefeller control in both parties—Kissinger, CFR, and Nelson Rockefeller on the Republican side and Albright/Gates/Brezhnev on the “Trilateral Commission” and David Rockefeller as the Democratic triumvirate. We will probably have some form of socialized (atheistic) medicine no matter who wins. It will doubtless come quicker under Governor Carter. Abortion reform will be possible under President Ford but is unlikely under Democratic total rule. The United States’ position as a world power has truly been eroded through the efforts of the present Senate and House as well as President Ford and Kissinger. It seems unlikely that any change can occur unless the House and Senate become conservative and this is probably not possible (unless God intervenes).

What shall this man do? He will pray—I can assure you of that. He will also praise God because as long as America is centered in Jesus—only good can come forth. It is good that the candidates love the Lord. For me—I’d like to hear more said regarding Jesus from both candidates. In the days ahead the one who has this courage will doubtless get my vote.

“Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven.” (Matthew 10:32)
